Title : Shaping our Shared Future - The Importance of the Youth in Decision Making

Ladies and gentlemen, esteemed guests, and most importantly the young ambitious minds gathered here today. Standing before you today as the Head of the Commonwealth, I am honoured to open this prestigious international conference on the importance of young people in decision- making. What if the power within you, the young minds of the world, could transcend boundaries and reshape the very fabric of our society? From all across the globe we have gathered here today to recognise and celebrate the tremendous potential that resides in each one of you. Malala Yousafzai, Nadia Whittome, Jamal Hill, and Chloe Swarbrick are widely known yet hail from different worlds. The one point of commonality they all share is their role in shaping decisions that affect society today through their perseverance and boldness. As the leaders of tomorrow, the power that exists within you all is invaluable. Your enthusiasm and fresh perspectives are vital to help course a better future for all of us. As you have shown us time and time again, through inspiring acts of courage and participation of the youth across the world, you have the ability to challenge conventional wisdom and bring innovative solutions to the table to solve problems. It is through your eyes we can see the world anew and find new ways to solve current issues such as social inequality, economic instability and environmental degradation.

 You, the young people of the Commonwealth represent a diverse spectrum of cultures, religions, experiences, and most importantly opinions. Our Commonwealth nations span the globe and within our borders there are millions of dreams waiting to be turned into reality. Due to limited access to quality education, lack of representation, and socioeconomic disparities young people find it difficult to participate in decision-making. However, despite these challenges there is a vibrant scope for action and developing a shared vision through collaboration and understanding each other.Instead of letting our differences weaken our unity we should embrace them and cultivate them as our strength.. These differences can enable an abundance of solutions that stretch beyond borders, communities and problems. Facilitating intergenerational dialogue can play a pivotal role in harnessing the wisdom of older generations, while simultaneously benefiting from the youthful perspectives and unbounded enthusiasm of young minds. By listening to each other we can bridge the gaps between our thoughts and build a brighter and fairer future.

Throughout history and current times, the youth have showcased their remarkable ability to challenge conventional wisdom, question the status quo, and offer innovative solutions that exceed traditional boundaries. In my own life I have witnessed the civil rights and suffrage movements of the past, which fought for basic rights and justice, to the current environmental and feminist movements that strive for a sustainable and inclusive world, it is the young who have led these transformative endeavours. It is their unwavering determination and belief in a better future that has propelled us forward as a society.

In science, technology, arts, and social innovation, the youth have spearheaded major breakthroughs and advancements. They have harnessed their passion and fearlessness to push boundaries and help create a positive impact in our world. Today, as we live in the era of social media, we need to recognise the role of popular platforms in giving the youth a stable, consistent and far-reaching stage, to deliver messages of value and foster a global movement of awareness and action that can create a positive, tangible impact.

To all the young leaders of the world, I urge you to seize this moment and become the architects of a better world. Embrace the power of unity and technology as means to amplify your voices, driving innovation, and fostering a positive change. It is through your collective effort that we can make our shared future fair and sustainable for all.

To help create lasting and meaningful change, we must ensure that our youth are equipped with the necessary resources, skills and opportunities to thrive in an increasingly complex world.As the Head of the Commonwealth, I am committed to supporting initiatives that promote youth empowerment and amplify your voices. Through our planned collaborative endeavour with the esteemedUnited Nations, we are committed to empower young changemakers across every Commonwealth country to develop initiatives that address critical issues of national importance. These initiatives, rich with the creativity and drive of the young, will innovate sustainable solutions for avenues such as the environment, women's empowerment, education, health and entrepreneurship. By providing a platform for young voices to be heard and ensuring their ideas are turned into meaningful action, we aim to create an environment where young people feel supported and empowered enough to contribute to the betterment of our society.

I hope that all of us across the Commonwealth can embrace our differences and balance the responsibility that comes with our potential. The world needs you to rise above the challenges that may come your way by using your determination and innovative spirit. Let us build bridges of collaboration, empathy, and understanding that exceed borders and unite people from all walks of life. Together all of us can create a Commonwealth and a world where diversity is celebrated and collaboration is the foundation for success.

I hold immense hope for more avenues such as this conference that can pave the way for a better future. I thank you for your time and keen listening today. I would like to end with a quote by one of Britain's greatest leaders, Winston Churchill: "Success is not final, failure is not fatal, it is the courage that counts."
